

Like the other teachings that we hear today, this one is aimed at transforming relationships among people. Jesus invites us to embrace the spirit behind the commandment against murder to understand God's will that we never harm another—not by killing, not by angry outbursts, not by insults, not even by name calling.

Jesus goes one step further when he says, "So when you are offering your gift at the altar, if you remember that your brother or sister has something against you, leave your gift at the altar and go; first be reconciled to your brother or sister, and then come and offer your gift" (Mt 5:24). Here Jesus cuts to the heart of authentic religion by setting right relationships on a higher plane even than worship.

As we consider this teaching about anger, it's important to recall that Jesus experienced anger himself. He became angry during some verbal exchanges with his critics. His anger flared up when he witnessed money changing and commerce taking place inside the Temple walls. By connecting anger to insult and name calling, I believe Jesus is inviting us to express our anger in ways that will not tear down our relationships but rather in ways that address injustice while still allowing room for forgiveness and reconciliation. Martin Luther King, Jr. expressed it this way: "Forgiveness does not mean ignoring what has been done or putting a false label on an evil act. It means, rather, that the evil act no longer remains a barrier to the relationship. Forgiveness means reconciliation, a coming together again. Without this, no one can love one's enemy."

The section of the Gospel of Matthew we hear today may not be our favorite passage, and yet it cuts to the heart of Jesus' message. We are called not simply to keep the rules, but rather to live and to act with respect for the dignity, equality, and well-being of every person, no matter how different or disagreeable.
