30th Sunday in Ordinary Time

‘They do not practice what they preach’

Pearls are formed by oysters. These lie on the seabed. These have little ruffles on their shells. From time to time an accident happens. A grain of sand finds its way between the folds of the muscle and irritates the flesh. In self-protection the flesh coats the grain of sand with a layer of smooth cement. Once started, the flesh continues to coat the foreign body with this cement. The result of this process is that a pearl is formed. Only one oyster in a thousand contains a valuable pearl. Oysters, even empty ones, cannot pretend as it is generally the ugly and flat ones that may contain a pearl. They may disappoint, but they cannot deceive. People, on the other hand, are quite capable of pretending and deceiving. Here lies the kernel of Christ’s quarrel with the Pharisees and Scribes in today’s Gospel. He accused them of showing on the outside what was not inside. He said they were only pretending to be good. They paraded themselves around dressed in fancy robes. They said long prayers, and kept all the rules, most which were of their own., rather than God’s making. But inside they were hollow and empty. Elements of the Pharisees behaviour exist in all of us.

This indulgence is applicable only to the souls of the departed.
