Reflection: The parable of the good Samaritan is not about being good or bad, it is a story about compassion. We often interpret the meaning of this parable from the perspective of one of the characters. 'I am a good Samaritan because last week I helped Mr. Old Man chop wood', or I'm just like the priest and Levite because yesterday I avoided Mrs. Old Woman who needed help with her garden. The problem with such an interpretation is that we individualise and personalise the meaning of the parable and therefore lose much of what it is saying. We either bask in the false glory of self-righteous behaviour or we sink deeper into guilt, which reinforces a sense of our own worthlessness. The truth is that we are all of the characters in the story at different times: lawyer, priest, Levite, Samaritan, and even the roadside victim. Each of us if we are truly honest is capable of denying or giving birth to compassion. What distinguished the good Samaritan, like Jesus, was the fact that he was prepared to interrupt his schedule and cross the road.
